Home on the Road
Further Dispatches from the Ends of the Earth

CATHERINE WATSON

Catherine Watson, the first travel editor at the Minneapolis Star Tribune, gives us her second collection of award-winning travel writing. From Tibet to the Galapagos, from the Arctic Ocean to Polynesia, Catherine Watson takes readers to the far corners of the globe, sharing rich encounters with other lives, insights into the human spirit, and the bittersweet tension between home and away.

“The eye is keen and kind, the writing by turns sharp and lyrical, the destinations ever a surprise. A magic carpet collection by one of our best.”—Patricia Hampl, author, *A Romantic Education, Virgin Time, Blue Arabesque

“Her stories get beneath the surface, grab hold of you and linger.”—Michael Yessis, co-founder, WorldHum.com

“These essays are literature, little windows into the mystery of how human beings live on this planet.”—Bill Holm, author, *The Heart Can Be Filled Anywhere on Earth, The Windows of Brimness

“Stories that take you beyond the well-known icons to the real experiences that make travel so wonderfully addictive.”—Peter Greenberg, travel editor, NBC Today Show

Catherine Watson is a nationally known travel writer, photographer, and teacher. She was the first travel editor at the Minneapolis Star Tribune and was its chief travel writer and photographer from 1978 until 2004. She is the author of Roads Less Traveled: Dispatches from the Ends of the Earth. Watson is an online mentor in the University of Minnesota’s Split Rock Mentoring for Writers Program. She lives in Minneapolis.
